

Torah, Genocide, and Ethnic Cleansing

Shabbat Eikev 5785

August 15, 2025

Rabbi Barry H. Block

The first time I went to Germany, I was twenty years old, studying abroad in Paris. Classmates suggested a trip to Munich for Oktoberfest, and I went along. I didn't give much advanced thought to the fact that I would be going to Germany. I found myself standing in a park, contemplating my fate—you know, for being Jewish, in Germany, only forty years earlier.

I had been to Auschwitz the year before, so I didn't really need to visit a concentration camp, except that I was so terribly uncomfortable being in Germany, so I went to Dachau. Some Oktoberfest!

This summer, I was far more comfortable being in Germany. A year or more ago, our Al Barron Book Club read Learning from the Germans, by Susan Neiman. Neiman, an American-born philosopher living in Germany, writes about reunified Germany coming to terms with the horrors of its Nazi past. Part of Rober's and my trip was devoted to seeing for ourselves the steps that Germany has taken across the last thirty-five years. We did not revisit Dachau or any other Nazi horrors.

Instead, we wanted to see how those crimes against humanity are memorialized by grandchildren of perpetrators and bystanders.

Berlin's memorial to the destruction of European Jewry is at the heart of the city, steps from the Brandenburg Gate and the Reichstag, Germany's national capitol. Smaller but important monuments to other groups of victims stand on their own nearby, with each group's degradation and decimation given its due.

Raphael Lemkin, a Jew who fled to the United States with the 1939 Nazi invasion of his Poland, would go on to coin the term "genocide" as he drafted the Geneva Convention. Genocide, the systematic attempt to destroy an entire people, is a word intended to describe Hitler's crime against humanity, and even more, to establish a basis in international law to prevent anything similar from happening again.

For twenty-two months now, the State of Israel has been accused of carrying out genocide in Gaza. The claim felt surreal, beginning as it did only weeks if not days after the horrific pogrom of October 7, when thousands of Hamas terrorists invaded Israel, indiscriminately slaughtering, raping, and kidnapping Israeli citizens, residents, and visitors of all ages, genders, religions, and nationalities. What could be more cynical, than accusing grandchildren of humankind's most horrific genocide of now perpetrating the same? Well, one thing could be more cynical: Asserting that the evildoers were not the barbaric terrorists, but the military of a democratic nation defending its citizens and to deter and prevent future terrorist assaults!

The genocide charge is false, for reasons better articulated by my teacher Tal Becker in The Hague. Common sense is equally persuasive: If Israel were seeking to rid the world of Palestinians, Israel would start with the millions who are its citizens or the millions more who live under Israeli occupation in the West Bank. No such thing is happening.

But. Ethnic cleansing is a different matter.

In our Torah portion this week, Moses conveys God's commandment regarding the other people whom the Israelites will encounter upon entering the Promised Land: "You shall destroy [literally, consume] all the peoples that your God יהוה delivers to you, showing them no pity."ⁱ Our rabbinic sages, interpreting this verse, with few exceptions, make it worse. “You should consume them like bread,”ⁱⁱ implying that murdering idolators will nourish the Israelites.

The verse goes on to give a reason for killing all the Land’s non-Israelite inhabitants: Their idolatrous ways will lead the Israelites astray. That rings true. Viewing Israeli government action in juxtaposition with its Hamas terrorist neighbors today, Hamas has turned at least some of our people into war criminals.

Ethnic cleansing is not the same as attempting to wipe out an people. Still, seeking to remove a people from its land—utilizing total war, famine, and expulsion—is a horrific crime.

The evidence has been horrifying since the war recommenced in February. Fox News reported then that “Defense Minister Israel Katz said...he welcomes President Donald Trump's proposal for large numbers of Palestinians to leave the Gaza Strip as he instructed the IDF to prepare a plan in line with the ... plan.”ⁱⁱⁱ Among many causes of the humanitarian catastrophe in Gaza, Israel’s blockade, prohibiting any food whatsoever from entering Gaza from March 2 to May 19, was significant.^{iv} This week, AP’s Sam Mednick reported from Jerusalem that Israel is in talks with South Sudan, hoping to send surviving Gazans there.^v We need not rely on suspect figures from a Hamas-controlled Gaza health ministry or anti-Israel press to understand that ethnic cleansing is the Israeli regime's goal, inspired by the President of the United States.

For two thousand years, our people prayed for return to the Land of Israel, and not only after the destruction of the Second Temple, but after the Romans ethnically cleansed the province they named Palestine, removing virtually all its Jews. Modern Zionists labored for decades to make return to our land a reality, after Jews were expelled—that is, ethnically cleansed—from one land after another in Christian Europe.

Writing in fourteenth century Spain, as the Catholic “reconquest” of Spain was increasingly threatening ethnic cleansing of Jews there, Rabbeinu Bachya wrote of that troubling passage in this week's portion: “Our [Talmudic] sages ... state that this only applied at the time ... Nowadays, stealing from or robbing Gentiles is certainly prohibited...The Jewish people are to be models of morality.

If we steal, we drag God's Torah into disrepute.”^{vi} Indeed, Israel's government today defiles the Divine Name.

The Nazis came much closer to ethnically cleansing Europe of Jews than they did to ridding the whole world of us. Still, we are a persistent people.

A highlight of Robert's and my trip was seeing living Jewish communities in Europe today. We toured Prague's Jewish Quarter with Amalka, whose maternal grandmother survived the Shoah because she was married to a Christian. Amalka did not have but the one Jewish grandparent, yet she and her husband are raising Jewish children, taking them to the Jewish day school that makes its home in what was once the Jewish Quarter's Town Hall. It's now a Jewish community center, surrounded by synagogues, most of which are not merely relics, but functioning Jewish houses of worship, study, and community for a resurgent Prague Jewish community. My German colleagues—like Rabbi Alex Kovtun, whom we met in March—tell me of a growing community, some native-born Germans of Jewish ancestry, but mostly immigrants from Ukraine and other parts of the former Soviet Union, as well as converts.

Maimonides teaches: Who has reached] complete repentance? A person who confronts the same situation in which they sinned previously and has the potential to commit [the sin again], and, nevertheless, abstains and does not commit it...^{vii}

Today, Germany could repeat its wrongdoing, not only by oppressing a growing Jewish community, but also by persecuting a larger Muslim population. Earlier this year, though, the German electorate disregarded the pleas of the Vice President of the United States and rejected the far-right Alternative for Germany, which promised to rid the land of immigrants.

One day, God willing, with the opportunity to attack Israel and Israelis, those who had once been Hamas terrorists will refrain.

One day, God willing much sooner, Israel will have the government sought by our Reform Movement in Israel and here in North America, a government that feeds the hungry, heals the sick, and seeks to make peace with its neighbors.

Then, with the strength, with the opportunity to wreak great destruction on one another, may both peoples restrain themselves in true repentance. Then, we may even cleanse Torah of that vile verse that calls for “consuming” other people in the land. Then, may Israelis and Palestinians both realize their national aspirations, side by side, at peace.

Amen.

ⁱ Deuteronomy 7:16.

ⁱⁱ See, for example, Ibn Ezra and Rabbenu Bachya to Deuteronomy 7:16.

ⁱⁱⁱ Christina Shaw, “Israeli defense minister orders IDF to plan for Gazans to leave in line with Trump's controversial proposal,” Fox News, February 6, 2025, <https://www.foxnews.com/politics/israeli-defense-minister-orders-idf-plan-gazans-leave-line-trumps-controversial-proposal>.

^{iv} Dave Lawler, “How Israel’s blockade caused starvation in Gaza,” Axios, June 30, 2025, <https://www.foxnews.com/politics/israeli-defense-minister-orders-idf-plan-gazans-leave-line-trumps-controversial-proposal>.

^v Sam Mednick, Israel is in talks to possibly resettle Palestinians from Gaza to South Sudan, AP, August 12, 2025, <https://apnews.com/article/israel-palestinians-hamas-war-gaza-relocation-south-sudan-15191c194cb6f972bc627a382d830edd>.

^{vi} Rabbenu Bachya to Deuteronomy 7:16.

^{vii} Mishnah Torah, Hilchot T’shuvah 2.